

The #1 mistake parents make when raising the child on the Autism Spectrum is not focusing on Defense Mode and not prioritizing getting their child out of Defense Mode above everything else.

While this particular term may be new to you, chances are that you've already had years of experience dealing with Defense Mode firsthand in your life. You probably just didn't know at the time that that's what it was called. Instead, you may have come to know Defense Mode and recognize it by many other different names and many different faces.

You may have seen it in your child's struggles with hygiene, their refusal to brush their teeth or take a shower. You've seen it in picky eating, in their rigid repetitive behaviors, in their hyper focus, talking for hours and hours about their favorite thing, or perhaps not talking at all. It may also seriously manifest as school refusal, or hiding out in the darkness of their room most of the time, playing video games, 16 hours a day and rarely coming out to spend time with the rest of the family.

This free guide, written from our combined experience of being on the Autistic Spectrum and helping thousands of families over our decade+ in operation, is specifically designed with checklists, scripts, detailed examples and explanations to help you...

1. Understand what Defense Mode is, what causes it, and how to help your child on the Autism Spectrum get out of Defense Mode for good.
2. Avoid the biggest mistakes when it comes to helping someone on the spectrum who is in Defense Mode (that can delay their growth & maturity by years... if not decades).
3. Know exactly what to say and do to effectively motivate them and hold boundaries... without walking on eggshells or getting overwhelmed yourself.

At the end of this free resource guide, you'll come away with a clear action plan you can put to work immediately.

-Danny Raede, Diagnosed With Asperger's and ADD at age 12

